Into the Wild Study Guide Buy Study Guide In January 1993, Jon Krakauer published an article in Outside magazine about the death of Chris McCandless, a young Emory graduate who had donated all of his money to charity, gotten rid of all his belongings, changed his name, and, in April 1992, after two years of itinerant living, walked alone into the Alaskan wilderness with few supplies, intending to live off of the land. Eventually McCandless dies of starvation inside an abandoned bus not far from Mt. McKinley. More than geographical, though, McCandless's quest is personal, as he tests his ability to survive alone in a series of hostile environments.
